The Daily Standard. Tuesday, August 30, 1870. The Standard Libel Case. day, August 22d, by the Stipendiary town till eleven or half-past eleven Magistrate, A. F. Pemberton, Esq. trate, was sent for to take bail, but for against the Proprietor of the STANDARD some, to us, unaccountable cause, did for a libel on the Licensing Magistrates not put in an appearance till the case terminated yesterday by the discharge was called, after eleven o'clock. Now, of the defendant. Mr. Pemberton was on the Bench, alone, and read his decis-The decision appears elsewhere in this issue, and a more flimsy judgment it has never been our fortune to hear or read. If it were called "Pemberton's Apology" in lieu of being designated the judgment of a Stipendiary Magistrate of twelve years' standing in a libel and apply them to the case under discussions. would be much more appropriate. If out of place; at least, so much so It were, however, a true apology, he would as a "gentleman" have frankly and manfully admitted that a mistake had been made,—that an injury had been done to the defendant,—and that he regretted its occurrence; but it neither scknowledges injury done, or regret for having done it. Hence he is not entitled to the credit of making an apology to the injured party. There is, however, in this judgment a most lame attempt to apologise to the public for a magisterial was first heard, if we were correct in erately condemned in this community. "I must put a stop to it"—meaning com-To make this judgment, or what may be called a quasi-apology to the public, of the Bench of Magistrates. We are carry with it the appearance of justifi-eation, statements have been put in it that are either foreign to the issue or not likely to trouble Mr. Pemberton's such as will not bear examination. The imagination in future. There is one featfirst point that it contains, to which are in the case that we feel constrained we direct attention, is that setting to mention. It is this: Mr. Pemberforth the right of Mr Pemberton ton has had the moral courage to retreat as Stipendiary Magistrate to arrest when he found that he was morally wrong in cases where a breach of the peace is anticipated. We are willing to such way as to neutralize its value. admit that he had this right of arrest. But we ask who was likely in this case to commit a breach of the peace? It could not be Dr. Trimble; for as soon as he informed the editor that, though on the Agricultural & Horticultural Bench, he never interfered in granting licenses outside of the city limits, we published a statement to that effect that exonerated him from being a party to the refeat of Stayen's License. Hence he licenses outside of the city limits, we pubrefusal of Steven's License. Hence he had no cause to break the peace. The only other two magistrates on the Bench were Mr. W. J. Macdonald and Mr. Pemberton. Now no one will believe that Mr. Macdonald would commit a breach of the peace. Even if he had been likely to do so, he was the party to arrest and not the proprietor of the STANDARD. But we fully exonerate Mr. Macdonald from any such Intention. Now the only other person whose acts as a Magistrate had been commented on, was Mr. Pemberton, Is there anyone who, for a moment, would suppose that he would forget his station as a magistrate and commit a common assault? We do not suppose so; but if he were likely to break the peace, he was the party that ought to have been ar-rested. If an article in a newspaper incites to a breach of the peace, it is the party attacked by the article who is likely to do so, and not the writer of the article. In such a case then there could have been no one but Mr. Pemberton. and Mr. Macdonald likely to commit an assault. Such being the case, there were for his old Customers and the Public Generally for his cents per Bushel and furnish Six Horses and four proprietor of the STANDARD for an alleged libel—certainly none through fear of him committing a breach of the peace. But Mr. Pemberton (we follow his written judgment) finds two reasons for issuing his warrant. His words are as follows: The known combative propensities of the defendant, exhibited in the public the defendant, exhibited in the public street upon more than one occasion, taken in connection with the fact that the libellous publications were being continued, seemed to threaten a breach of the peace; hence the issue of the warrant." The very fact of referring to "the combative propensities of the defendant" in the judgment, is sufficient to condemn the judgment of Mr. Pemberton in this community at least. "The combative propensities of the defendant" combative propensities of the defendant" were not likely to break the peace ; for we have already shown that the only persons to disturb the peace, under such circumstances, were Mr. Pemberton and Mr. Macdonald, and we have not admitted the possibility of their doing so. Under such circumstances the allusion of Mr. Pemberton to the "combative propensities of the lefendant" are as unworthy of the Bench as they are false in their implication. On no such occasions as those alluded to has "the defendant" ever been the aggressor; but always and invariably has the provocation proceeded from others; hence, the statement of Mr. Pemberton, if not libellous, is incorrect in its implied meaning. Next, he

Now, in reply to this statement, we have to say that only one article appeared in the STANDARD as an editorial, and that was on the 18th. On the 19th a letter signed "Viator," from a highly respected and influential citizen, appeared, that commented briefly on the Stevens' case. Not a word on the subject was uttered afterward. Hence, the statement that "the libellous publications were continued" is far-fetched. That the editorial matter was "libellous," we distinctly deny. It was a passing com-ment, not published with any intention Pemberton's statement that he had ordered that the defendant should not be treated as a prisoner, must be taken at its full value ; but, at the same time, the officer who made the arrest said that he was instructed to serve the warrant about ten o'clock,-and he did so. But when asked who was to take bail, he The suit that was commenced on Mon. said that Mr Pemberton would not be in mediately after opening his Court sary severity attending the arrest, we are not prepared to say ; but it is very admittedly of his own bringing, it and apply them to the case under discusing bim full credit for correctness of judgment in this conclusion, does it not appear to be something remarkable that a Stipendiary Magistrate of twelve years, standing should not have thought of the freedom of the press before the warrant ment that all illusions of that kind are in the course he had taken ; but did it in

The Standard Libel Case.

The Hen. A. F. Pemberton, in the Police

Court yesterday morning, delivered the following judgment in the above case:

Having reviewed the arguments advanced in this case by Mr. McCreight, I feel that in rendering my judgment they are entitled to careful consideration. With reference to the learned Counsel's remarks upon the arrest by warrant. I would observe that for offences. warrant, I would observe that for offences threatening a breach of the peace, a Justice has authority necessarily incident to the cognizance of the offence, to apprehend the ac- LAST NIGHT'S DISPATCHES. cused in the first instance, if he thinks such a course proper under the circumstances of the case. The known combative propensities of the defendant, athibited in the public streets upon more than one occasion, taken in connection with the fact that the libellous publications were being continued, seemed to threaten a breach of the peace; hence the issue of a warrant. It was issued on Saturday. directed, however, that it should not be executed till Monday, and that the defendant should not be locked up or treated as a prisoner; that he simply be compelled to appear in Court at 11 o'clock. Blackstone says "the direct tendency of libels is the breach of the public peace, by stirring up the objects of em to revenge, and perhaps to bloodshed.' He defines libels to be "malicious defamations of any person, and especially a magistrate, made public by either printing, writing, signs or pictures, in order to provoke him to wrath, or expose him to public batred, contempt and ridicule." I have referred to the case which I quoted in support of the power vested in the Bench of Magistrates to take sureties for good behavior upon a charge of libel, (Holroyd vs. Sparke). It was tried in 1853, and it was decided that they had that power. The objections to my adoption of that course, raised by Mr. McCeight, appear, however, to have great weight, and as nothing is further from my intentions than to interfere with the freedom of the press or liberty of the subject, I shall discharge the defendant, leaving it to the Attorney General to take steps in the matter, if he shall think fit

The European Duel

Somewhere, in one of his novels, Herman Melville relates that when his ship was lying in the harbor of Rio Janeiro, she was visited by the Emperor of Brazil, with a brilliant train, blazing with buttons, braid and bullion There gorgeous gentry, unused to the mysteries of a ship's internal economy, got themselves tied into all sorts of knots in the darkness of 'tween decks, to their own misery humor: "Nothing, Sir, only one of them the year, but he refused. kings has fell down the hatch!" In Europe Mule races are the popu to-day, one of them kings" bewildered by the misfortunes which have met him at every turn ; feeling France slip, like a lithe wrestler, from under his weakening grasp; hardly able to see his way out from the maze of his perplexities; has fallen down the hatch; from which he is bent on escaping, or on pulling others in with him. This war is as purely a personal duel between Louis Napoleon and Bismark-for he is the true brain-representative of Prussia, old King William being but a white-whiskered figure-head-as any tournament of old between two rival knights. Since Sadowa, the two have set on [their chargers, with watchful eyes and intent brows, hand on bridle rein, lance in rest. The gage of battle now thrown by France, they strike spurs and charge toward the meeting line in the centre of the lists-the Rhine. It is not alone the necessity, the ambition, the greed of Napoleon, that brings this duel. It is quite the thing now in this country, to represent him as a big bully, and Bismark as an inoffensive gentleman jammed into a corner and forced to fight-an amusing role for the latter to play an injured innocent imposed on by a bigger boy! Since that day in '62, when from behind King William as his stalking-horse, he kicked the Prussian liberals from the Abgeordneten Haus in Berlian, to the day when, violation of the whole treaty of P stamped out every visible vestige of popu'ar liberty in the Schleswig-Holstein provinces; sank, and was drowned. throughout all his extraordinary career, Bismark has been as firm a foe of freedom, as arbitary in his suppression of the press and the public voice, as unscrupulous in the present of his personal aims, as Napoleon himself. The apparant grand object of his life, which now endears him to the German heart-the building up of an unitedFatherland inspired doubtless by ambition personal aggrandizement, as much as by any better motive. This present war, whether willed by him or not, shall be molded by him to his own pur-Our suggestion for carrying on the war is this: let Napoleon with his Chassepot rifle, Bismarck with his needle-gun, be locked in a darkened room, and there allowed to fight it out, in the true Western style. If both of them go up, the world will be the better, and their respective countrymen well pleased. As for all this talk about the "popular enthusiasm" for the war in both countries, it is what the youthful Englishman calls "perfect rot." The common people don't, want to fight; it's none o' their funeral. The
